Fitch Ratings-New York-05 February 2024: U.S. consumer spending was remarkably resilient in 2023, underpinned by robust job and income gains, strong household balance sheets and finances, moderating inflation, and improving consumer sentiment, according to Fitch Ratings.

“The strength of the U.S. economy reflects renewed fiscal easing, consumers’ willingness to continue drawing on excess savings, strong household balance sheet fundamentals and a tight labor market,” said Olu Sonola, head of Fitch U.S. economic research.

Household nominal disposable income increased in 2023 at 6.9% yoy, supported by strong employment and nominal wage growth. Real household disposable income was also very robust at 4.2% yoy, supported by 3.4% growth in real labor income. A notable decline in aggregate personal tax payments in 2023 provided an added boost to disposable personal income growth.

Consumer net worth increased by 5.1% YTD 3Q23, primarily due to the rebound in the equity market and real estate equity.

Fitch revised its annual real consumer spending forecast for 2024 upward to 1.3% from 0.6%, reflecting the ongoing willingness and ability of consumers to draw down buffers of excess savings, which will likely support spending well into 2024.

Household debt increased substantially over the last four quarters ending in 3Q23, largely driven by mortgage debt and credit card borrowing. Consumer use of home equity line of credit is now growing, which suggests consumers slowly tapping into the significant increase in real estate equity built up since 2020. Credit card spending growth is starting to decelerate.

Household debt service remained relatively low as of 3Q23, but is expected to increase to 11.7% by 2025 from 9.9% in 2023.

The percentage of loan balances 90+ days delinquent remains at multi-decade lows across all loans combined. Auto and credit card transition rates have regressed to pre-pandemic levels and are likely to trend higher in the coming quarters.

In issuing and maintaining its ratings and in making other reports (including forecast information), Fitch relies on factual information it receives from issuers and underwriters and from other sources Fitch believes to be credible. Fitch conducts a reasonable investigation of the factual information relied upon by it in accordance with its ratings methodology, and obtains reasonable verification of that information from independent sources, to the extent such sources are available for a given security or in a given jurisdiction. The manner of Fitch's factual investigation and the scope of the third-party verification it obtains will vary depending on the nature of the rated security and its issuer, the requirements and practices in the jurisdiction in which the rated security is offered and sold and/or the issuer is located, the availability and nature of relevant public information, access to the management of the issuer and its advisers, the availability of pre-existing third-party verifications such as audit reports, agreed-upon procedures letters, appraisals, actuarial reports, engineering reports, legal opinions and other reports provided by third parties, the availability of independent and competent third-party verification sources with respect to the particular security or in the particular jurisdiction of the issuer, and a variety of other factors. Users of Fitch's ratings and reports should understand that neither an enhanced factual investigation nor any third-party verification can ensure that all of the information Fitch relies on in connection with a rating or a report will be accurate and complete. Ultimately, the issuer and its advisers are responsible for the accuracy of the information they provide to Fitch and to the market in offering documents and other reports. In issuing its ratings and its reports, Fitch must rely on the work of experts, including independent auditors with respect to financial statements and attorneys with respect to legal and tax matters. Further, ratings and forecasts of financial and other information are inherently forward-looking and embody assumptions and predictions about future events that by their nature cannot be verified as facts. As a result, despite any verification of current facts, ratings and forecasts can be affected by future events or conditions that were not anticipated at the time a rating or forecast was issued or affirmed. Fitch receives fees from issuers, insurers, guarantors, other obligors, and underwriters for rating securities. Such fees generally vary from US$1,000 to US$750,000 (or the applicable currency equivalent) per issue. In certain cases, Fitch will rate all or a number of issues issued by a particular issuer, or insured or guaranteed by a particular insurer or guarantor, for a single annual fee. Such fees are expected to vary from US$10,000 to US$1,500,000 (or the applicable currency equivalent). The assignment, publication, or dissemination of a rating by Fitch shall not constitute a consent by Fitch to use its name as an expert in connection with any registration statement filed under the United States securities laws, the Financial Services and Markets Act of 2000 of the United Kingdom, or the securities laws of any particular jurisdiction.
