SUBJECT: Establishing Concurrent Jurisdiction over Juvenile Misconduct on Military Installations within the Territory of the United States

The Department is making great progress in improving its response to incidents of problematic sexual behavior in children and youth (PSB-CY) in Department of Defense Education Activity schools and elsewhere on our military installations worldwide. While I recognize and appreciate the efforts already completed and those currently underway, it has become clear we must do more with respect to the appropriate adjudication of PSB-CY and other behavior by juveniles on military installations that amount to illegal conduct. As the Department is Constitutionally prohibited from conducting prosecutions of individuals not subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ), we must, where we are able, remove barriers to the investigation and adjudication of appropriate cases by civilian authorities, particularly of those States, Commonwealths, territories, or possessions within which our military installations are located.

Officials working to fix juvenile justice gap at Fort Hood

Military, county and federal officials are taking steps to plug a jurisdictional gap at Fort Hood that had allowed numerous alleged sexual assaults committed by juveniles to go unprosecuted since at least 2001.

According to Fort Hood, a member of the post's Staff Judge Advocate office met with U.S. Attorney's Office officials and Bell and Coryell county prosecutors this month to discuss the handling of juvenile offenses on Fort Hood. Future meetings are planned — though not yet scheduled — to discuss the “possibility of a formalized agreement regarding criminal prosecution of juvenile offenders,” according to Fort Hood.

The Justice Department Prosecuted A 10-Year-Old As A 'Sex Offender'
